Copious adornments drive statement necklace line

Ornamentation ranges from the popular crystals and rhinestones to the unconventional coins and harmony balls.

China makers of statement necklaces are adopting bold and diverse embellishments to come up with visually appealing pieces.

Releases that feature crystal and rhinestone pendants are popular. The adornments come in various shapes and vivid hues such as red, orange and turquoise blue. Some are trimmed with polychromatic tassels, coral-shaped metal, gold coins and harmony balls. Gold- and silver-plated chains add elegance. Pieces that are marketed with drop earrings are also offered.

Suppliers use nickel- and lead-free materials to ensure safety. The adoption of environment-friendly metal alloys is likewise increasing.

Most designs are customizable. Sizes, colors, materials and finishes can be buyer-specified as well.

Buyer's Guide

Importing custom jewelry from China

This article will discuss what you must know about buying ODM (private label) and OEM (custom designed) jewelry from China and other Asia manufacturers. It will also explain product development, sample production and production regulations applicable to jewelry, and will guide you through the various labelling and testing requirements.

Product development process

1. Jewelry parts selection

Most jewelry buyers opt for factory standard components, rather than OEM parts. Most suppliers can, directly or through subcontractors, offer extensive jewelry part catalogs. Hence, you have the following options when designing your products:

I. ODM products (no design changes): Base your design entirely on the supplier's existing ODM designs.

Customize an existing ODM product: Modify an existing ODM product by adding or removing parts.

II. Custom design (using ODM parts): Jewelery can be designed "from scratch" using existing ODM parts from the buyer's catalog.

III. Custom design (using OEM parts): Custom-designed parts results in high tooling costs, especially when buying a large number of SKUs.

Product documentation must be prepared for each SKU. Making jewelry samples require attention to detail and key specifications that are easily lost in translation. In order to reduce the risk of an endless number of sample batches, prepare the following for all SKUs:

- 2D design drawings (showing ODM parts and position)
- ODM parts list
- ODM parts material specifications
- Label/logo badge and part files (.ai format)

2. Preproduction samples

Option A: Self-assembled jewelry samples

If you intend to design your own jewelry using ODM parts, you might consider buying said parts directly from the manufacturer rather than assembled samples. This approach can save weeks and enable you to test new designs in a highly cost-efficient way.

The self-assembled samples shall then be returned to the suppliers, acting as preproduction samples. However, make sure to order two sets of jewelry parts as you need to keep at least one piece of each SKU for your own reference.

Option B: Supplier-assembled jewelry samples

If you intend to base the design on the supplier's existing ODM samples, you should buy assembled samples rather than ODM components. This enables you to test the supplier's attention to detail. However, the samples are only as good as the sample documentation. You should expect several sample revisions before you are ready to place a first mass produced batch.

3. Mass production and quality assurance

A. Incoming materials & parts inspection

Purchasing parts and materials is the first step of the production process. As quality issues tend to stem from the production of the parts, you should consider hiring an inspector as soon as the parts arrive at the factory. Hence, quality issues can be avoided at an early stage, reducing the risk of severe delays.

B. Preshipment inspection

The final and most important inspection shall be carried out when the products are fully assembled. Some defects, scratches for example, occur during assembly and packaging, making the final, preshipment inspection essential. However, as always, clear instructions are the key to a successful outcome. Provide the quality inspection agency with all design drawings and component lists well in advance of the inspection date.

Product regulations and compliance testing

1. Applicable regulations

Jewelry is subject to various substance and "mechanical" regulations in the US, the EU and other markets. Children's jewelry is subject to additional regulations. The table explains what jewelry imports in the US and EU must know.

Product Regulations and Compliance Testing
Market	Regulation	Description
US	CPSIA	The Consumer Product Safety Improvement Act (CPSIA) regulates all toys and other children’s products imported to, or made in, the US.
US	CA Prop 65	California Proposition 65 restricts more than 800 substances in consumer products. Unlike CPSIA, which only applies to children’s jewelry, California Proposition 65 also applies to jewelry sold to adults. Compliance is mandatory if you intend to sell in, or to buyers in, California and employ at least 10 workers. However, even if your total number of employees is less than 10, most (online and offline) retailers still require compliance with California Proposition 65.
EU	REACH	REACH (Registration, Evaluation, Authorisation and restriction of Chemicals) restricts content of SVHCs in all consumer products sold in the EU. Compliance is mandatory for all jewelry imported to the EU.
EU	EN 14682:2007 EN 71 Part 1	EN 14682:2007 (Safety of children’s clothing. Cords and drawstrings on children’s clothing specifications) and EN 71 Part 1 restricts cord and chain length to prevent strangulation.
AU/NZ	AS/NZS ISO 8124.1:2002	AS/NZS ISO 8124.1:2002 regulates children’s products sold in Australia and New Zealand, including jewelry marketed to children aged 14 or younger.

Buyers outside the mentioned markets might still want to consider to ensure compliance with EU or US standards. While many countries may not have regulations specifically for jewelry, general consumer safety regulations do apply in many Asia, South America and Eastern Europe markets.

2. Hallmarking and other labeling requirements

Platinum, silver and gold jewelry are subject to hallmarking requirements. Many countries have their own specific hallmarking standards. Customs authorities are prone to checking imported precious jewelry and improperly marked precious jewelry is likely to be seized. Apart from hallmarking, which does not apply to nonprecious jewelry (i.e. stainless steel, pearl jewelry), country of origin markings may apply.

3. Compliance testing & certification requirements

Whether or not compliance testing is mandatory depends on the market and applicable regulations. Compliance testing and certification is often mandatory when importing children’s jewelry. However, even when testing is not mandatory, compliance always is. Hence, the question of whether or not your company shall submit samples for testing is often a matter of risk management.

It is also a matter of costs. Testing companies charge based on the number of samples. A necklace, for example, can consist of five to 10 different components and result in very high testing costs. These can range from $100 to $800, depending on the regulation and number of parts. Testing an entire jewelry collection is, therefore, very costly. There are, however, a few strategies that can help you reduce the testing costs:

1. Use the same jewelry parts on as many SKUs as possible, reducing the number of lab tests needed to verify compliance.
2. Avoid children’s jewelry as the compliance testing requirements are very strict.

Your parts can either be tested according to a specific set of substances, for example, those restricted by California Proposition 65 or part of the REACH SVHC list or specific substances (i.e. lead, nickel, cadmium). However, keep in mind that some regulations require that each SKU is certified rather than individual parts.

Monthly capacity of over 2 million units

Qualified for market entry

We have exported our aluminum packaging solutions to over 50 countries across the world, with our main markets in the US, Western Europe and Australia. We ensure our products are ready for import, and so they're all compliant with LFGB requirements. And they're made in our ISO 9001:2000-certified factory. But those aren't the only reasons our clients choose us.

More than 10 years' experience using advanced machinery

We have over 10 years of experience, and our 12,000m<sup>2</sup> factory is equipped with the latest production machinery. This combination allows us to achieve a monthly capacity of over 2 million units. Come to us for over 3,000 types of containers, or send us your requests for custom finishes and colors.

Making bottles the right way

Our bottles have capacities ranging from 10 to 1,500 milliliters, or even larger if required. Our aluminum storage bottles are made from high-strength virgin aluminum, which makes them virtually indestructible and suitable for storing anything. They also utilize a one-piece design to further ensure durability. And an epoxy resin coating is applied on the inside to make them resistant to corrosion. Inquire now.
