Global Sources supplier rankings

Suppliers are ranked using a 6-star ranking system. Companies with a higher star ranking provide more business information and verification reports on their Global Sources online homepages. Suppliers rated 5 or 6 stars have a Credit Check report from First Advantage or Sino-Trust and a Supplier Capability Assessment report provided by Bureau Veritas online. The rankings are correct at the time of publication and may be subject to change.

NOTE TO READERS: All prices quoted in this magazine are in US dollars, unless otherwise specified. FOB prices were provided by the companies interviewed only as reference prices at the time of the interview and may have changed. POs and the promotional products buyer

When placing an order, it is common for the promotional products buyer to send a purchase order (PO) to his China vendor.

Does your vendor care about the PO? Do YOU care about the PO?

Most likely, you put more emphasis and importance on your POs than your supplier in China will place on the document.

This document is sent to the factory from the buyer whenever the buyer gives the green light to start manufacturing the order.

In the buyer’s mind, this document is authoritative, and provides official confirmation, specifications and sufficient proof to start purchasing material and commence mass production.

If the job is a reorder and there is a strong working relationship with a vendor, then a PO may very well suffice.

If it’s a first-time order either with the factory or you do not order frequently from this factory or it’s a new or customized item, then a PO is not going to hold much sway.

Typically, the promotional products buyer does not place many reorders of the same item. Whether structurally or from a branding perspective, items ordered are highly customized. The promotional product buyer imports from a wide range of vendors.

In the supplier’s mind and actions, these are the documents that are important:

- Their own quotation, i.e. the quotation the supplier sent to you. This is what they will refer back to time and time again, even if it differs from their invoice.
- Their own invoice or pro forma invoice. This is what will have the pricing, the amount due for deposit and balance, some confirmed product specs and the supplier’s bank detail.

If the supplier is responsible, the invoice will include all specifications that are in their quotation and have been confirmed during the approval process. You should make sure of this. This is not an official “contract”, but for the purpose of importing promotional products from China, this is generally the most official document you can hope to get.

This is why I have mixed feelings on a PO and the average promotional products buyer (distributor). Where does the PO come into play?

My humble opinion is that for the promotional product buyer, the PO should simply be a green light that shows you are ready to start the order.

The document probably serves more purposes internally in your own company than it does with the vendor.

Why?

* Unless you have a very strong working relationship with the factory, they WILL NOT start the order based on the PO. They will start the order based on the deposit. Thus, their invoice holding sway because it has their bank detail.

The bank detail is the channel which assures that the supplier receives the payment. Receiving the payment trumps receiving a PO.

The PO holds sway domestically. Domestically, an onshore supplier receives the document and starts the job. If for some reason the buyer backs out of the job, the domestic vendor has more recourse.

Without the deposit on hand, what recourse will the China vendor who purchased material and started production have if the buyer backs out?

- * If you include specifications or requirements on the PO that were not in the supplier’s quotation, invoice or confirmed sample, the supplier may ignore the points.

If what has “slipped” in under the lines of the PO was not discussed beforehand and has bearing on the price, the supplier is in the right to modify pricing accordingly.

Imagine the scenario: You include specific packing on the PO that was not stated in the quotation or the supplier’s invoice.

The supplier does not read this on the PO.

The order is completed, you receive the QC report and the packing requested in the PO is not to be found.

You inform the vendor that they missed your requested packing and they tell you that this additional packing was not considered, incurring additional cost and a delay in delivery.

You then proceed to do an ALL CAPS breakdown via email on the supplier...

- * Make sure the PO lines up exactly with the supplier’s invoice. Thus my earlier thinking that the document, if not a reorder, becomes somewhat redundant.
- * If the PO does not line up exactly with the supplier’s invoice, this shows where a breakdown in communication may have occurred during all the confirmation stages. In other words, if the supplier doesn’t know such and such was expected, why not?
- * Does your PO include internal codes, reference numbers and wording that are not relative to the order? Do your payment terms say “net 30” because this is what you generally do domestically?

For example, if you usually order domestically and there are certain codes or tags used with domestic vendors, why are these same points of info included for your offshore supplier?

You may say, “well, that’s just template” or “just disregard”, but you see, this proves my point. Now it’s just electronic clutter and the more clutter, the more irrelevant the document becomes to the suppliers’ eyes.

This also shows the buyer not treating the document with the importance that it deserves – if in fact in you are going to send the document.

If you are going to send it, why not make it correct?

Keep in mind that if you issue a PO that does not line up exactly with what was previously confirmed and there turns out to be a production issue, your vendor will use that against you whenever their documentation also does not line up.

“You’re wrong, we’re wrong, let’s be wrong together.”

Keep in mind that if you issue a PO that does not line up exactly with what was previously confirmed and there turns out to be a production issue, your vendor will use that against you whenever their documentation also does not line up.

To round this off

Make the PO professional and line up exactly with the documentation that the supplier is going to use.

Spend some of your preproduction energy making sure the final quotation from the supplier and the supplier’s invoice (the document with the price and bank detail on which you make the deposit) include everything that is required and pertinent to a successful order.

Experience tells me the order is going to be smoother if you carefully check the suppliers’ documentation instead of ASSUMING they will check yours.

Sports souvenirs: Gallery with 6 products, profiles of 11 export-ready suppliers, buyer demand trends

Sports souvenirs highlight customization options

Full-on customization adds variety and distinction to an otherwise traditional line of sports souvenirs.

China suppliers of sports souvenirs distinguish themselves by using materials, surface treatments and applications, and designs that are completely buyer-specified.

Many of the latest releases feature colors and themes of international sporting events. Pantone colors are popular. Custom logos can be printed or embroidered on promotional clothing such as shirts and caps.

Small souvenir items such as medals and pins use different surface treatments, including die-striking and electroplating. Some models have a soft enamel finish and epoxy coating.

Other souvenirs come in the form of plastic mugs and foldable bags.

Our Market Analysts handpicked these products to represent trends in sports souvenirs.

Suppliers are ranked using a 6-star ranking system. Companies with a higher star ranking provide more business information and verification reports on their Global Sources online homepages. Suppliers rated 5 or 6 stars have a Credit Check report from First Advantage or Sino-Trust and a Supplier Capability Assessment report provided by Bureau Veritas online. The rankings are correct at the time of publication and may be subject to change.
