Global Sources supplier rankings

 Suppliers are ranked using a 6-star ranking system. Companies with a higher star ranking provide more business information and verification reports on their Global Sources online homepages. Suppliers rated 5 or 6 stars have a Credit Check report from First Advantage or Sino-Trust and a Supplier Capability Assessment report provided by Bureau Veritas online. The rankings are correct at the time of publication and may be subject to change.

Buyer's Guide

China cook- and kitchenware production

In the past year, we have seen a growing number of startups and SMEs, primarily in the US, importing cookware, kitchenware and other food-contact materials, many of which are present on Amazon.com. We thought it was just about time to cover this segment in its very own product guide.

In this article, we explain everything you need to know to find the right manufacturer, and why compliance with European and US food-contact material regulations cannot be taken for granted when sourcing in China.

Manufacturing clusters in China

Kitchen utensils is not a uniform category of products, and therefore production is not concentrated in a specific city, region or province. That said, there are locations of interest for importers of cookware, kitchenware and other food-contact materials in the following China cities:

- Yangjiang, Guangdong: knives and stainless steel cookware
- Jiangmen, Guangdong: stainless steel cookware
- Chaozhou, Guangdong: stainless steel cookware
- Dongguan, Guangdong: silicone, rubber and plastic kitchenware
- Jieyang, Guangdong: cutlery
- Ningbo, Zhejiang: stainless steel cookware
- Taizhou, Zhejiang: silicone, rubber and plastic kitchenware
- Yiwu, Zhejiang: plastic culture
- Yongkang, Zhejiang: metal cookware
- Xuzhou, Jiangsu: glassware
- Shijiazhuang, Hebei: cast iron cookware

As you can see in the list above, most cookware and kitchenware manufacturers are based in the provinces of Guangdong, Zhejiang and Jiangsu. Yet, this is a brief overview. Do your research before jumping on the next flight to Hong Kong or Shanghai.

Product development

Most, if not all, of our clients importing cookware and kitchen products do so with their own brand. The most popular option is to brand an existing factory design (ODM), rather than develop a new product from scratch. As stated in the table below, OEM product development requires considerably more resources than branding an existing product.

While a factory design is not equal to an off-shelf product, it does save plenty of time to utilize a ready-made product specification.

Product customization also results in increased tooling costs, the largest of which tend to be the cost of the injection mold/s. In addition, the production time of the mold itself, especially for metal products, can easily take up to two months. Unless you really need a custom designed product, I'd advise you to go ODM instead.

	FACTORY	ODM	OEM
Dev. time (d)	0	15 – 30	60 – 120
Tooling costs	None	Low	High
MOQ (pcs)	500 – 1,000	500 – 1,000	1000 – 2,000

Regulations

Food-contact materials are regulated to a varying extent in most markets – especially the US and the EU. To most purchasers and business owners in the industry, this may not come as a surprise. However, there are a few things you need to be aware of before wiring a deposit payment:

1. Compliance with US and European food-contact materials is not to be taken for granted. In fact, it's the exception, rather than the rule. For this reason, you need to verify that the supplier has a solid compliance track record.
2. Wholesale products tend to primarily be manufactured for the domestic China market. As such, compliance with foreign regulations (e.g. 21 CFR) is not taken into consideration. China has its own set of regulations applicable to food-contact materials. Yet, these may not be equal to the regulations in your country.
3. Kitchenware manufacturers with a strong compliance track record may not be the cheapest suppliers on the market. That said, there’s nothing more costly than a forced recall.

4. A substance test report, for example, is only proving that a sample from a specific batch passed compliance testing. While such a document is indeed an indication of “previous compliance,” it’s not a valid reason for neglecting compliance testing on the batch/es imported by your company. In fact, batch testing may even be required if not by law, then by your retailers.

Clearly, different markets have their own set of regulations. Therefore, you must first confirm which regulations apply to kitchenware and cookware in your country before selecting a supplier. In addition, there are different regulations that apply to specific types of cookware and food-contact materials.

Compliance with US and European food-contact materials is not to be taken for granted.

EU

In the EU, member states are free to set their own food-contact regulations, some of which target specifically stainless steel products. As such, the landscape is somewhat fragmented. France, for example, requires stainless steel cookware to contain at least 13 percent chromium, while Italy has a list of stainless steel grades. Additionally, there are release limits for metals, alloys or coating that may cause harm to either human health or the environment.

Other frameworks and regulations apply specifically for plastic and ceramic food-contact materials. Furthermore, there are regulations and directives applicable to certain products such as coffee percolators and catering equipment.

US

Importers of stainless steel cookware in the US must adhere to regulations administered by the FDA. There are also voluntary standards developed by the American Iron and Steel Institute (AISI) – more specifically AISI.304 and AISI.316. As in the EU, regulations are not only applicable to the base material itself but also to substances found in coatings.

Cookware and kitchenware for commercial use (e.g. restaurants) are treated differently as compared to products for domestic usage. Similar differences exist for food-contact materials intended for repeated use (e.g. a frying pan), compared to single-use products (e.g. food packaging).

BPA

BPA is a chemical used in industrial manufacturing processes of various plastics, especially transparent plastic packaging. As of today, the US, the EU and Canada have banned BPA use in baby bottles, but no such ban is in place for BPA use in cookware, kitchenware and other food-contact materials. In 2013, an assessment by the FDA deemed BPA to be safe at the current low levels in food-contact materials.

The FDA’s current perspective, based on its most recent safety assessment, is that BPA is safe at the current levels occurring in foods. Based on the FDA’s ongoing safety review of scientific evidence, the available information continues to support the safety of BPA for the currently approved uses in food containers and packaging.

However, consumers in the mentioned markets remain wary of BPA content in plastic food-contact materials, which in turn has driven, at least US and European manufacturers to gradually phase out the chemical. What is somewhat ironic is that China manufacturers are much keener to advertise their produce as “BPA-free,” while neglecting actual food-contact material regulations in their target markets.

The trend is also similar on Amazon.com, where sellers proudly advertise their products as such. This is leading many importers to assume that their items are compliant if they are only rid of BPA – which in contrast to many other substances, is not even required by law to begin with. Don’t get me wrong. Phasing out chemicals is never a bad thing, but this may just not be the first thing you and your team should look at.

Additional regulations

As explained above, importers must ensure compliance with all applicable food-contact material regulations. Moreover, EMC (e.g. FCC Part 15 and the EU EMC Directive) and children’s product regulations (e.g. CPSIA) may also apply, depending on the type of product and its intended usage.
